MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

Introduction

In response to a single incident in which a fire department response to anti-vaccination activists disrupted an early effort at conducting mass vaccinations, California has imposed an unprecedented 30-foot no-approach bubble zone surrounding anyone exiting or entering any vaccination site in the entire state, when the speaker wishes to engage in “oral protest,” “education,” or “counseling.” To make matters worse, California has exempted a favored kind of “oral protest” from that blanket prohibition: those wishing to protest in conjunction with a labor dispute are welcome to do so. Cal. Penal Code § 594.39(d). It is not enough for California to simply invoke its unquestionably compelling interest in stemming the spread of COVID-19. Brach v. Newsom, 6 F.4th 904, 931 (9th Cir. 2021). In the context of fundamental constitutional rights, it must also demonstrate that its legislation is narrowly-tailored to that interest. Id. But it cannot. Section 594.39 criminalizes speech that threatens no increased risk of COVID-19 transmission or of disturbing those seeking access to vaccines. And conversely, it simultaneously fails to criminalize other (preferred) expression that does risk COVID-19 transmission or a disturbance outside a vaccination site.

Give an inch and they’ll take a mile. A 5-4 Supreme Court decision in 2000 authorizes states to enact narrowly-tailored, content-neutral laws that establish 8-foot “bubble zones” to protect those entering or exiting health-care facilities. Hill v. Colorado, 530 U.S. 703 (2000). California has taken that inch as a license to enact an untailored, content-based, 30-foot floating bubble zone to protect those entering or exiting vaccination sites. Complaint ¶ 1. California Penal Code section 594.39 is overbroad, content-based, and facially unconstitutional.

Factual Background

Plaintiff Rajan Gupta is a 17-year-old California resident passionate both about the spread of accurate information regarding COVID-19 vaccines and about the First Amendment. Defendant Rob Bonta, named in his official capacity as Attorney General for the State of California, is California’s chief law enforcement officer charged with enforcement of the

1 challenged statute, Cal. Penal Code § 594.39, added by the recently-signed bill SB 742.¹ Senate
2 Bill 742 was authored by State Senator Dr. Richard Pan in response to an incident at Dodger’s
3 Stadium whereby anti-vaccine protesters temporarily disrupted COVID-19 vaccine 4 distribution. Complaint ¶ 21. Although several state legislators and commentators expressed 5 concern about the bill’s constitutionality, Complaint ¶¶ 23-24 & 27, the bill passed both 6 legislative houses of California, receiving approval from the California Senate on September 8, 7 2021, Complaint ¶ 42. The bill was signed into law by Governor Gavin Newsome on October 8 8, 2021. Complaint ¶ 43. The law is now codified as Cal. Penal Code § 594.39 and is currently 9 in effect because of the SB 742’s urgency clause. Id.

10 Plaintiff wishes to continue his demonstrations in support of COVID-19 vaccines 11 outside of local pharmacies that serve as vaccination sites. See Complaint ¶ 57-67. In view of 12 Cal. Penal Code § 594.39’s enactment, Plaintiff is now concerned his education activities expose 13 him to criminal prosecution carrying penalties of up to six months jail time and up to a $1,000 14 criminal fine. Complaint ¶¶ 69-70. These fears have chilled him from continuing to 15 demonstrate and speak in favor of vaccines outside his neighborhood pharmacies and other 16 vaccination sites like grocery stores.

17 18 Legal Standard for Preliminary Injunction

19 Four factors determine whether a court should issue a preliminary injunction: 20 (1) whether the plaintiff is likely to succeed in the litigation; (2) whether the plaintiff will suffer 21 irreparable harm absent the injunction; (3) the balance of equities; and (4) the public interest.
22 Am. Bev. Ass’n v. City & Cty. of San Francisco, 916 F.3d 749, 754 (9th Cir. 2019) (en banc). In the 23 context of a First Amendment claim, the test generally turns on the first factor. Where plaintiffs 24 “have a colorable First Amendment claim, they have demonstrated that they will suffer 25 irreparable harm if the [law] takes effect.” Id. at 758. And “the fact that plaintiffs have raised

26
27
28 ¹ SB 742 includes four sections, the second of which operates to add a new section to the penal code, Cal. Penal Code § 594.39. This brief shall cite the new Penal Code section, and only cite SB 742 when quoting other sections of the bill, such as the preamble.

1 serious First Amendment questions compels a finding that the balance of hardships tips sharply
 2 in plaintiffs' favor." Id. (cleaned up). Likewise, the Ninth Circuit "has consistently recognized
 3 the significant public interest in upholding First Amendment principles." Id. (internal quotation 4 omitted). "Indeed, it is always in the public interest to prevent the violation of a party's 5 constitutional rights." Id. (internal quotation omitted).

6 To determine whether a First Amendment plaintiff can demonstrate a likelihood of 7 success, the Ninth Circuit has framed a burden-shifting approach where "the moving party 8 bears the initial burden of making a colorable claim that its First Amendment rights have been 9 infringed, or are threatened with infringement, at which point the burden shifts to the 10 government to justify the restriction." Thalheimer v. City of San Diego, 645 F.3d 1109, 1116 (9th 11 Cir. 2011). Because of the extraordinary nature of injunctive relief, including the potential for 12 irreparable injury if not granted, a district court may consider evidence outside the normal rules 13 of evidence, including hearsay, exhibits, declarations, and pleadings. Johnson v. Couturier, 572 14 F.3d 1067, 1083 (9th Cir. 2009); see also NRA of Am. v. City of Los Angeles, 441 F. Supp. 3d 915, 15 931 (C.D. Cal. 2019) (considering "the text of the Ordinance, the Ordinance's legislative 16 history, and the concurrent public statements made by the Ordinance's primary legislative 17 sponsor" in a First Amendment challenge to find "a strong intent to suppress the speech").
 18 For example, a verified complaint is evidence that may support injunctive relief. Thalheimer, 645
 19 F.3d at 1116.

 21 I. Gupta is likely to succeed on the merits because California Penal Code section 22 594.39 is content-based, and even if content-neutral, is not narrowly tailored.

23 A. Section 594.39 is content-based and cannot satisfy strict scrutiny.

24 "Content-based regulations—those that target speech based on its topic, idea, or 25 message—are presumptively invalid." Boyer v. City of Simi Valley, 978 F.3d 618, 621 (9th Cir.
 26 2020). A law is content-based on its face if it "draws distinctions based on the message a speaker 27 conveys" through either "subject matter," "function[,] or purpose." Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 576 28 U.S. 155, 163 (2015). In other words, if "enforcement authorities [need] to examine the content

1 of the message that is conveyed to determine whether a violation has occurred,” then the law
2 is facially content-based. McCullen v. Coakley, 573 U.S. 464, 479 (2014) (internal quotation
3 omitted). Alternatively, a facially neutral law is still content-based if it “cannot be justified 4 without reference to the content of the regulated speech” or was “adopted by the government 5 because of disagreement with the message the speech conveys.” Reed, 576 U.S. at 163. In other 6 words, “[t]he purpose behind a challenged restriction is the threshold consideration in deciding 7 whether a policy is appropriately neutral.” Eagle Point Educ. Ass’n/SOBC/OEA v. Jackson Cty.
8 Sch. Dist. No. 9, 880 F.3d 1097 (9th Cir. 2018) (internal quotation omitted). By both measures, 9 Section 594.39 is content-based.

10 If a law contains a content-based exemption or exclusion, that renders the law itself 11 content-based on its face. Thus, for instance, a general ban on residential picketing becomes 12 unconstitutionally content-based in the presence of an exemption for labor picketing. Carey v.
13 Brown, 447 U.S. 455, 460-61 (1980). A general ban on picketing near a school becomes 14 unconstitutionally content-based in the presence of a similar exclusion for labor picketing. Police 15 Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 94-95 (1972). A general school uniform policy becomes 16 content-based by the presence of an exemption for uniforms of “nationally recognized youth 17 organizations such as Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts on regular meeting days.” Frudden v. Pilling, 18 742 F.3d 1199, 1206-07 (9th Cir. 2014). A general regulation of postsecondary educational 19 institutions becomes content-based by the presence of exemptions, including for “solely 20 avocational or recreational” subject matter. Pac. Coast Horseshoeing Sch., Inc. v. Kirchmeyer, 961 21 F.3d 1062, 1072 (9th Cir. 2020). Where the law “favors particular kinds of speech and particular 22 speakers through . . . exemptions,” “[t]hat means [it] necessarily disfavors all other speech and 23 speakers.” Id. “[T]he government may not decide that speech on certain subject is more (or 24 less) valuable—and therefore more (or less) deserving of First Amendment protection—than 25 speech on other subjects.” Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 707 F.3d 1057, 1078 (9th Cir. 2013) (Watford, 26 J., dissenting), rev’d 576 U.S. 155 (2015).

27 Section 594.39 is thus content-based because of subsection (d), which stipulates that “It 28 is not a violation of this section to engage in lawful picketing arising out of a labor dispute, as

1 provided in Section 527.3 of the Code of Civil Procedure.” In turn, that section of the code 2 protects, inter alia, “giving publicity to, and obtaining or communicating information regarding 3 the existence of, or the facts involved, in any labor dispute” Cal. Code. Civ. P. § 527.3(b)(1).
4 Thus, under California law, it is a criminal offense to approach within 30 feet of someone 5 seeking to enter a vaccination site (without consent) for the purpose of passing a leaflet or 6 handbill or displaying a sign, or engaging in oral protest, education, or counsel. Cal. Penal Code 7 § 594.39(a), (c)(1). Except it is perfectly fine if the leaflet, handbill, sign, protest, education, or 8 counsel is part of a picketing operation arising out of a labor dispute.

9 Previously, the Defendant argued that Cal. Penal Code § 594.39(d), is not an exemption 10 at all, but essentially contains unnecessary surplusage to “clarify” that picketing would have 11 never been criminalized by the bill. However, a fair reading of the statute and its history 12 confirms that the legislature intended to preserve the rights of labor protestors to approach 13 people in order to “pass[] a leaflet...display[] a sign to, or engag[e] in oral protest,” all of which 14 are ordinary picketing behavior and now criminal within the vicinity of a pharmacy, hospital, 15 or clinic—except when done for matters arising out of labor disputes. Such interpretation flies 16 in the face of the canons of statutory construction and of the legislative history. “[O]ne of the 17 most basic interpretive canons is that a statute should be construed so that effect is given to all 18 its provisions, so that no part will be inoperative or superfluous, void, or insignificant.” Rubin
19 v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 138 S.Ct. 816, 817 (2018); Antonin Scalia & Bryan A. Garner, READING 20 LAW: THE INTERPRETATION OF LEGAL TEXTS 174 (2012) (No provision should “be given an 21 interpretation that causes it . . . to have no consequence.”). This anti-surplusage canon is 22 “strongest when an interpretation would render superfluous another part of the same statutory 23 scheme.” Marx v. Gen. Revenue Corp., 568 U.S. 371, 385 (2013). The exemption occurred late in 24 the process, months after the original bill’s reference to “picketing” had been deleted upon the 25 bill’s introduction to the Assembly in June. See Complaint, ¶ 29. On September 3, just five days 26 before both chambers passed the bill, the legislature added a specific exemption: “It is not a 27 violation of this section to engage in lawful picketing arising out of a labor dispute, as provided 28 in Section 527.3 of the Code of Civil Procedure.” Complaint ¶¶ 39-40. The anti-surplusage

1 canon is “of particular importance,” as here, “where . . . the relevant statutory text was added
2 by amendment.” Hayes v. Harvey, 903 F.3d 32, 42 (3d Cir. 2018) (en banc).

3 The legislature evidently believed that labor picketing might otherwise violate the text 4 of the bill, and for good reason. Picketing is nothing but a combination of carrying signs, oral 5 protest, and hand billing, and SB 742 criminalizes approaching people for any of these purposes 6 within 100 feet of a vaccination site (which will almost always also be a job site). Cf. Boos v.
7 Barry, 485 U.S. 312, 333 (1988) (“picketing’ is most directly implicated in the display clause”).
8 While “picketing” is mentioned by SB 742 and § 527.3, neither law defines the term, and no 9 authority suggests that picketing does not embrace approaching individuals for one-on-one 10 conversation. The personal experiences of Plaintiff’s attorneys suggest that peaceful picketing 11 does generally include picketers explaining their grievances. While Defendant may be correct 12 that lawful picketing does not obstruct access to job sites, demonstrators certainly may 13 approach potential listeners to share their message. Under SB 742, labor disputes—and labor 14 disputes alone—enjoy this Constitutional right within the vicinity of a vaccination site.

15 Carey is on all fours. In Carey, the Supreme Court struck down a statute that generally 16 prohibited picketing of residences and dwellings but exempted “the peaceful picketing of a 17 place of employment involved in a labor dispute.” 447 U.S. at 457. That plainly “accords 18 preferential treatment to the expression of views on one particular subject; information about 19 labor disputes may be freely disseminated, but discussion of all other issues is restricted.” Id. at 20 461. Thus, the Supreme Court held that the statute was not content-neutral because “[t]he 21 permissibility of residential picketing under [the statute] is thus dependent solely on the nature 22 of the message being conveyed.” *Id.*² Here too; “under the guise of preserving . . . privacy,

25 ² The law does not fare any better if subsection (d) is merely construed as a “speaker-26 based” exemption for union members or others engaged in a labor dispute. Such exemptions 27 “are all too often content-based regulations in disguise.” Boyer, 978 F.3d at 621 (internal 28 Id. at 622–23.

1 [California] has flatly prohibited all nonlabor picketing even though it permits labor picketing
2 that is equally likely to intrude on the tranquility [outside vaccination sites].” Id. at 462.

3 This content-based discrimination immediately distinguishes California’s law from the 4 Colorado statute Hill upheld. 530 U.S. 703.³ Hill was predicated on a finding of content-
5 neutrality; nothing in Hill supports a content-based scheme. Hoye v. City of Oakland, 653 F.3d
6 835, 853 (9th Cir. 2011). There is “no persuasive . . . argument” that a content-based regime 7 could “survive such strict scrutiny.” Id. As in Carey, carving out, for instance, protests against 8 mandatory vaccines for union workers, demonstrates that “privacy is not a transcendent 9 objective”: “nothing in the content-based labor-nonlabor distinction has any bearing 10 whatsoever on privacy.” 447 U.S. at 465.

11 Moreover, the distinction between “engaging in oral protest, education, or counseling” 12 and other types of speech (e.g., mundane pleasantries, solicitation, asking for directions) is itself 13 content-based. Hill held to the contrary,⁴ but that holding “is incompatible with current First 14 Amendment doctrine as explained in Reed and McCullen.” Price v. City of Chicago, 915 F.3d 1107, 15 1117 (7th Cir. 2019); accord Bruni v. City of Pittsburgh, 941 F.3d 73, 93 (3d Cir. 2019) (“continued 16 vitality” of Hill’s “content neutrality analysis is questionable after Reed”). Nevertheless, Gupta 17 realizes this Court and the Ninth Circuit are bound by Hill until the Supreme Court abrogates 18 it. So, he does not ask the Court to grant an injunction on this basis, but he preserves the issue 19 for further review in the event that it becomes necessary. See Bruni v. City of Pittsburgh, 141 S.
20 Ct. 578 (2021) (Thomas, J., respecting the denial of certiorari) (echoing the concern of Price).

21 Beyond the text of the statute, a law is also non-neutral if it has been “adopted by the 22 government because of disagreement with the message the speech conveys.” Reed, 576 U.S. at 23 164 (cleaned up). That verboten purpose—“the desire to suppress a particular point of view”—

24
25 ³ The Colorado statute in Hill prohibited, in relevant part, “knowingly approach[ing] 26 another person within eight feet of such person, unless such other person consents, for the 27 purpose of passing a leaflet or handbill to, displaying a sign to, or engaging in oral protest, 28 education, or counseling with such other person in a public way or sidewalk area within a radius of one hundred feet from any entrance door to a health care facility.” 530 U.S. at 707 n.1.

⁴ 530 U.S. at 720.

2 1106 (internal quotation omitted); Cornelius v. NAACP Legal Def. & Educ. Fund, 473 U.S. 788, 3 812 (1985). Although the Assembly Committee on Public Safety Report disclaims any hostility 4 to any “one political position relating to vaccines” and avows that “this bill is agnostic to a 5 speaker’s message,” the historical justifications for the bill (scant though they are) rely entirely 6 on anti-vaccination protests, one at Dodger Stadium, another in Tennessee, and another anti-7 vaccination online campaign which forced a Nevada-based vaccination organization to cancel
8 two in-person events. Complaint ¶¶ 44-47. Worse still, the original sponsor of the bill, Senator 9 Pan, in the legislative record singled out “anti-vaccination extremists” as the target of the law.
10 Id. at ¶ 32. After passage of his bill, he issued a press release that referenced anti-vaccine 11 extremists, anti-vaccine “hordes,” an anti-vaccine “mob,” and their “propaganda.” Press

18 overwhelming intent to suppress the message of [anti-vaccination activists].” NRA of Am., 441 19 F. Supp. 3d at 933. Other legislators’ comments confirm that supporters of the bill hoped to 20 chill speech of a particular (anti-vaccination) viewpoint. Complaint ¶¶ 24, 27, 41.⁵

21 A law is not content neutral when it “cannot be justified without reference to the content 22 of the regulated speech” nor when it is “concerned with undesirable effects that arise from the 23 the direct impact of speech on its audience or listeners’ reactions to speech.” Reed, 576 U.S. at 24 164 (internal quotation omitted); McCullen, 573 U.S. at 481 (same). Section 594.39, concerns 25 itself with preventing “individuals from feeling uncomfortable with unwelcome contact.”

27 ⁵ While plaintiff does not share the antivaccination viewpoint targeted by the legislature, 28 he is prejudiced by the overly broad and censorious law, so has standing to observe that the legislature did not pass a neutral law.

1 Complaint ¶ 31 (quoting Assembly Committee on Public Safety Report). What contact is not 2 unwelcome? According to that Committee Report, and as expressed through the text of the 3 bill, speech “like incidental conversations or people walking near each other without the 4 purpose of advocacy, protest, or education” “does not implicate the concerns that this bill 5 addresses.” Id. This justification depends upon listeners’ reaction to certain speech content. As 6 such, the law is content-based. “The overbreadth of the [law] further demonstrates that it was 7 designed to do more than prevent disruption of [access to vaccines].” Eagle Point Educ. Ass’n, 8 880 F.3d at 1107.

9 Because Section 594.39 is content-based, it can only be upheld if the State can satisfy 10 strict scrutiny—that is, a showing that the law is the least restrictive means of meeting a 11 compelling government interest. This is “the most demanding test known to constitutional 12 law” and only the “rare case” can satisfy it. City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 534 (1997); 13 Williams-Yulee v. Florida Bar, 575 U.S. 433, 444 (2015). For the reasons described in the following 14 section, the 30-ft floating bubble zone is by no means narrowly tailored to California’s asserted 15 interests in either preventing transmission of COVID-19 or in preventing disruption to those 16 seeking access to vaccines. As in Carey, the exemption for speech relating to labor disputes has 17 no “bearing whatsoever on [the government’s interest].” 447 U.S. at 465. Transmission of 18 COVID-19 does not stop simply because boisterous chanting involves a labor dispute. Nor is 19 labor picketing less of an impediment to anyone entering a vaccination site than is any other 20 “oral protest.” Nor is it any less of a disruption to the serenity outside of a vaccination site. “If 21 some groups are exempted from a prohibition . . . , the rationale for the regulation is fatally 22 impeached.” Id. at 465 n.9 (internal quotation omitted).

23
 24 B. Even if content-neutral, Section 594.39 is not narrowly-tailored, nor does it leave open ample alternative channels of communication.

25 If Section 594.39 could be construed as a content-neutral “time, place, and manner” 26 regulation, it would be subject to intermediate scrutiny, which requires the government to 27 demonstrate that it is “narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest” and that 28 it “leave[s] open ample alternative channels for communication of the information” that the

1 speaker wishes to convey. Comite de Jornaleros de Redondo Beach v. City of Redondo Beach, 657 F.3d
2 936, 945 (9th Cir. 2011) (en banc). Although Gupta agrees that combatting the physical 3 transmission of COVID-19, avoiding disruption of the vaccination process, and preventing 4 disturbances at vaccination sites are all significant interests of California, Section 594.39 is not 5 narrowly tailored to serve those interests nor does it allow speakers an ample alternative to 6 reach their intended audiences.

7 To begin, “the government bears the burden of showing that the remedy it has adopted 8 does not burden substantially more speech than is necessary to further the government’s 9 legitimate interests.” Comite de Jornaleros, 657 F.3d at 948 (cleaned up). But it cannot do so here; 10 there are several “‘obvious examples’ of prohibited speech that do not cause the types of 11 problems that motivated the [law].” Id. (quoting Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc’y of N.Y., Inc. v.
12 Vill. of Stratton, 536 U.S. 150, 166 (2002)). Leafletting, handbilling, or displaying a sign can be 13 all done silently and unobtrusively, without posing any increased risk of aerosolized COVID 14 transmission or disturbance of those entering or exiting a vaccination site. Therefore, “it is 15 difficult, indeed, to justify a prohibition on all uninvited approaches of persons seeking the 16 services of the clinic, regardless of how peaceful the contact may be, without burdening more 17 speech than necessary to prevent intimidation and ensure access to the [vaccination site].” See 18 Madsen v. Women’s Health Center, Inc., 512 U.S. 753, 774 (1994). On the flip side, rowdy labor 19 picketing and protesting, as well as singing, chanting, or any other manner of rambunctious 20 speech in close quarters can increase the risk of virus transmission. But Section 594.39 permits

1 such expression as long as it's not an "oral protest," "education," "counseling" or is otherwise 2 related to a labor dispute.⁶

3 Moreover, imposing a 30-foot bubble zone around individuals near any vaccination site
4 is transparently overinclusive to the state's interests. "No other State" has imposed anything 5 like a bubble-zone around those near vaccination sites, let alone a social distancing measure at 6 a 30 foot radius! McCullen, 573 U.S. at 490. California cannot argue a 30-foot radius is based in 7 health concerns, as its own public health department has never mandated, or even 8 recommended, that social distancing greater than six feet was justified.⁷ One assemblyman even 9 remarked, without contradiction from anyone else that "there's absolutely no evidence I know 10

11 ⁶ Insofar as California might assert it has a "compelling" or even "significant" interest in 12 preventing "individuals from feeling uncomfortable with unwelcome contact," that is doubtful.
13 The First Amendment means that individuals necessarily risk encountering uncomfortable and 14 unwelcome speech in public fora. If people wish to "bombardment of their sensibilities," the 15 customary remedy is "averting their eyes." Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 21 (1971). "The right 16 to provoke, offend and shock lies at the core of the First Amendment." Rodriguez v. Maricopa 17 County Cmty. College Dist., 605 F.3d 703, 708 (9th Cir. 2010). "[I]n public debate our own citizens 18 must tolerate insulting, and even outrageous, speech in order to provide adequate breathing 19 space to the freedoms protected by the First Amendment." Madsen, 512 U.S. at 774 (cleaned

1 of of—and I’ve been looking—that you can transmit over 30 feet outside.” Complaint ¶ 33.
2 This unprecedented regulation “raise[s] the concern that the [State] has too readily forgone 3 options that could serve its interests just as well, without substantially burdening the kind of 4 speech in which [Gupta and others] wish to engage.” Id. And as in McCullen and Comite de 5 Jornaleros, there are myriad other options available for California to combat the types of 6 problems it has identified. To be clear, the Assembly identified three objectionable events 7 across the country: (1) “extremists disrupted vaccination efforts at Dodger Stadium”; (2) “In 8 Tennessee, a woman plowed through a tent in an effort to disrupt vaccine distribution”; and 9 (3) “A Nevada-based vaccination organization had to cancel two in-person events in December 10 [2019] after anti-vaccination activists launched an online harassment campaign against it.”
11 Complaint ¶ 44 (quoting Assembly Public Safety Committee Report). There are any number 12 of laws already in the Penal Code that can address these problems without burdening core 13 protected speech. To name a few examples: Cal. Penal Code § 647c proscribes “willfully and 14 maliciously obstruct[ing] the free movement of any person on any street, sidewalk or other 15 public place”; Section 647 proscribes disorderly conduct; Section 240 proscribes assault; and 16 Section 653.2 proscribes using electronic communications to instill fear or harass. The 17 Assembly was also aware, through comments from A Voice for Choice Advocacy, that Penal 18 Code §§ 404.6, 408, and 415 respectively prohibit inciting a riot, unlawful assembly, and 19 disturbing the peace. Complaint ¶ 49 (quoting Assembly Public Safety Committee Report).

20 Additionally, the Assembly’s Appropriations Committee Report recognizes that the new 21 law is “similar” to Cal. Penal Code. §§ 423 et seq., the California Freedom of Access to Clinic 22 and Church Entrances Act. Complaint ¶ 36 (quoting Appropriations Committee Report).
23 However, the differences between the two laws are telling, and reveal that Section 594.39 could 24 easily be more tailored to avoid infringing First Amendment rights. The California Freedom of 25 Access to Clinic and Church Entrances Act proscribes only violent or non-violent “physical 26 obstruction” “intimidat[ion],” “injur[y],” or “interfere[nce]” with those entering churches or 27 clinics. Cal. Penal Code. § 423.2(a)-(d). It does not prohibit pure speech in the form of “oral 28 protest” “education” or “counseling.” Similarly, Cal. Penal Code § 602.11 proscribes

1 preventing an individual from entering or exiting a health care facility, place of worship or 2 school through “physically detaining” the individual or “physically obstructing” his passage.
3 Again, that law steers clear of First Amendment problems by stipulating that “‘Physically’ does 4 not include speech.” Id. at § 602.11(b)(1). The Court “cannot ignore the existence of these 5 readily available alternatives.” Comite de Jornaleros, 657 F.3d at 950; accord McCullen, 573 U.S. at 6 491–93 (discussing alternatives including “existing local ordinances”).

7 There should be no “dispute that speech-neutral remedies exist.” Imdb.com, Inc. v. Becerra, 8 962 F.3d 1111, 1125 (9th Cir. 2020). Regardless of any ipse dixit contention otherwise, “the 9 government must demonstrate that alternative measures that burden substantially less speech 10 would fail to achieve the government’s interests, not simply that the chosen route is easier.” 11 McCullen, 573 U.S. at 495. But, “to the extent the [State] argues that even these types of laws 12 are ineffective, it has another problem.” Id. at 493. The legislative record reveals only a single 13 incident in California (and only two others across the nation). All of these involve early mass 14 vaccination events, and the State can “point . . . to no evidence that individuals regularly gather 15 [at neighborhood pharmacies, retailers, or other customary vaccination sites] in sufficiently 16 large groups to obstruct access.” Id. “For a problem shown to arise only once [in the entire 17 state], creating [a 30-foot bubble zone around individuals at every vaccination site in the state]
18 is hardly a narrowly tailored solution.” Id. The law applies to each and every neighborhood 19 pharmacy “yet the [State] has introduced evidence of . . . problems [only with respect to a small 20 number of [mass vaccination events].” Comite de Jornaleros, 657 F.3d at 949. There is no 21 justification for legislating “in such a sweeping manner.” Id.; see also Bay Area Peace Navy v. United 22 States, 914 F.2d 1224, 1227-28 (9th Cir. 1990) (finding justifications “unrelated to incidents in 23 the San Francisco Bay Area, or in the United States for that matter”).⁸

25
26 ⁸ Section 594.39 is not only geographically overinclusive, it is also geographically 27 underinclusive to the extent the bill aims to curb direct transmission of disease. COVID-19 28 does not distinguish between places of transmission. If it can spread outside vaccination sites; it can spread in any other place people may want to protest.

1 Before restricting speech, “the government must present more than anecdote and 2 supposition.” United States v. Playboy Entm’t Group, 529 U.S. 803, 822 (2000). Nor is “mere 3 speculation” enough. Bay Area Peace Navy, 914 F.3d at 1228 (citations omitted). “Specifically, 4 the First Amendment demands that the government provide tangible evidence that speech 5 restrictive regulations are necessary to advance the proffered interest in public safety.” Edwards 6 v. City of Coeur D’Alene, 262 F.3d 856, 863-64 (9th Cir. 2001) (cleaned up). In Edwards for 7 example, the Ninth Circuit concluded that a municipal sign ordinance predicated on a single 8 incident suffered from a “lack of empirical evidence.” Id. at 865; see also Napa Valley Publ. Co. v.
9 City of Calistoga, 225 F. Supp. 2d 1176, 1195 (N.D. Cal. 2002) (Chen, J.) (preliminarily enjoining 10 city’s newsrack ordinance where “there appear[ed] to be no ‘tangible evidence’ justifying the 11 Ordinance’s particular limit on the number of newsracks per block”). In another case, the State 12 of Washington claimed that the legislative history had demonstrated the need for a general 13 prohibition on exit polling. Daily Herald Co. v. Munro, 838 F.2d 380 (9th Cir. 1988). But 14 “reviewing the legislative hearing,” the Ninth Circuit found “no such evidence,” only “one 15 instance of an exit pollster blocking voters’ entrance to the polling booths” that “the media 16 plaintiffs agree the state can regulate . . . in the polling place.” Id. at 385 n.8. Likewise here, 17 there is no dispute that activity of the Dodger Stadium protests, if it had transpired as 18 proponents of the bill had mischaracterized it (see Complaint ¶ 47), can be regulated under a 19 properly drawn statute (many of which already exist). But California lacks the empirical 20 evidentiary basis for anything remotely similar to Section 594.39. See also Watchtower Bible &
21 Tract Soc’y, 536 U.S. at 169 (“there is an absence of any evidence of a special crime problem 22 related to door-to-door solicitation in the record before us”). Indeed, it is wrong for California 23 to effectively “punish[]” “the many peaceful protesters . . . and members of the general public”
24 “for the violent acts of others.” Index Newspapers LLC v. United States Marshal Serv., 977 F.3d 25 817, 834 (9th Cir. 2020). “The proper response to potential and actual violence” is to assure 26 adequate enforcement and “to arrest those who actually engage in such conduct, rather than 27 to suppress legitimate First Amendment conduct as a prophylactic measure.” Id. (quoting 28 Collins v. Jordan, 110 F.3d 1363, 1373 (9th Cir. 1996)).

1 “[T]he government, not the plaintiff, must prove that a challenged law satisfies 2 intermediate scrutiny.” Drummond v. Robinson Township, 9 F.4th 217, 231 (3d Cir. 2021). “If [the 3 legislature] could immunize its own rules from review merely by mentioning public safety, 4 heightened scrutiny would be heightened in name only.” Id. at 233.

5 “The lack of empirical evidence . . . would be less problematic if the impact on speech 6 were negligible.” Edwards, 262 F.3d at 865; cf. Napa Valley Publ. Co., 225 F. Supp. 2d at 1194 7 (“[D]eference to the government’s assertion of a substantial interest . . . does not end the 8 Court’s inquiry. The reasonableness of the means selected to further those interests may be 9 subject to closer scrutiny.”). But the 30-foot bubble zone “effectively destroys speakers’ ability 10 to engage in one-on-one communication and leafletting within the restricted areas.” Verlo v.
11 Martinez, 820 F.3d 1113, 1137 (10th Cir. 2016) (cleaned up). “[W]hile the First Amendment 12 does not guarantee a speaker the right to any particular form of expression, some forms—such 13 as normal conversation and leafletting on a public sidewalk—have historically been more 14 closely associated with the transmission of ideas than others.” McCullen, 573 U.S. at 488.
15 Indeed, “one-on-one communication” is “the most effective, fundamental, and perhaps 16 economical avenue of political discourse” and “no form of speech is entitled to greater 17 constitutional protection” than leafletting. Id. at 488–89 (internal quotation omitted); see also 18 Baldwin v. Redwood City, 530 F.2d 1360, 1368 (9th Cir. 1976) (recognizing the importance of 19 inexpensive, effective and “localized” methods of political communication).

20 Again, as with narrowly tailoring, California bears the burden to show that the statute 21 leaves open ample alternative channels of communication. Bay Area Peace Navy, 914 F.2d at 22 1229. Given the historical uniqueness and significance of one-on-one communication in a 23 public forum, California cannot show Section 594.39 does this. Indeed, a 30-foot bubble zone 24 simply does not permit the speaker “to reach his or her intended audience” at all, much less 25 “in an equally effective manner as the prohibited speech, and without incurring meaningfully 26 greater costs in time or money.” Comite de Jornaleros, 657 F.3d at 955 (Smith, J., specially 27 concurring); Napa Valley Publ. Co., 225 F. Supp. 2d at 1195 (“[W]here there are numerous and 28 obvious less-burdensome alternatives to the restriction on protected speech, that is certainly a

1 relevant consideration in determining whether the ‘fit’ between ends and means is reasonable.”) 2 (internal quotation omitted).

3 California will likely point to Hill as upholding a Colorado statute that imposed an 8-foot 4 bubble zone around those entering abortion facilities. But Hill itself distinguished a 15-foot 5 bubble zone that the Court had invalidated in Schenck v. Pro-Choice Network of W.N.Y., 519 U.S.
6 357 (1997). “Unlike the 15-foot zone in Schenck, this 8-foot zone allows the speaker to 7 communicate at a ‘normal conversational distance”” Hill, 530 U.S. at 726–27 (quoting Schenck, 8 519 U.S. at 377). Ambitiously, California not only tries to reprise the 15-foot zone repudiated 9 in Schenck, they try to double it! Given Schenck, California’s 30-foot bubble zone cannot pass 10 muster. See Edwards v. City of Santa Barbara, 150 F.3d 1213, 1216 (9th Cir. 1998) (reasoning from 11 the comparative size of the buffer zones at issue in Madsen and Schenck).

12 Hill recognizes that “the First Amendment protects the right of every citizen to reach 13 the minds of willing listeners and to do so there must be opportunity to win their attention.”
14 Id. at 728. But while “signs, pictures, and voice itself can cross an 8-foot gap with ease,” a 30-15 foot gap is a different story. Id. at 729; also Schenck, 519 U.S. at 377 (“[F]loating buffer zones 16 [of even 15 feet] prevent defendants . . . from communicating a message from a normal 17 conversational distance or handing leaflets . . .”). Indeed, trying to communicate over such a 18 large gulf would generate the exact problems the statute purports to combat. It would 19 necessitate increasing voice modulation and thereby aerosolizing more particles as well as 20 potentially disturbing the peace with yelling or shouting. It should be clear that this 21 “threaten[s]” “the speaker’s ability to communicate effectively.” Bay Area Peace Navy, 914 F.2d 22 at 1229.

23 For the same reasons that the statute is overinclusive, it is also infirm as constitutionally 24 overbroad. “In the First Amendment context, a party bringing a facial challenge need show 25 only that ‘a substantial number of [a law’s] applications are unconstitutional, judged in relation 26 to the statute’s plainly legitimate sweep.”” Knox v. Brnovich, 907 F.3d 1167, 1180 (9th Cir. 2018); 27 Comite de Jornaleros, 657 F.3d at 944. “The overbreadth doctrine exists out of concern that the 28 threat of enforcement of an overbroad law may deter or ‘chill’ constitutionally protected

1 speech—especially when the overbroad statute imposes criminal sanctions.” Comite de Jornaleros, 2 657 F.3d at 944 (internal quotation omitted).

3 Because Section 594.39 is both over and underinclusive with respect to California’s 4 legitimate interests, and because it is not tethered to a discernible problem, and because it 5 effectively bans timeworn and valuable modes of communication, it cannot satisfy intermediate 6 scrutiny. Therefore, it is unconstitutional even if it construed to be content-neutral, and Gupta 7 is likely to succeed in this litigation.

9 II. Gupta will suffer irreparable harm if the Defendant is not enjoined from 10 enforcing Section 594.39.

11 “When an alleged deprivation of a constitutional right is involved, such as the right to 12 free speech or freedom of religion, most courts hold that no further showing of irreparable 13 injury is necessary.” 11A Wright & Miller, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 2948.1 (3d 14 ed. Apr. 2020 update). Both the Ninth Circuit and the Supreme Court “have repeatedly held 15 that the loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably 16 constitutes irreparable injury.” Klein v. City of San Clemente, 584 F.3d 1196, 1207-08 (9th Cir.
17 2009) (internal quotation omitted; citing cases). “[A]ny First Amendment infringement that 18 occurs with each passing day is irreparable.” Neb. Press Ass’n v. Stuart, 423 U.S. 1327, 1329 19 (1975). The “chill on . . . free speech rights—even if it results from a threat of enforcement 20 rather than actual enforcement—constitutes irreparable harm.” Cuviello v. City of Vallejo, 944 21 F.3d 816, 833 (9th Cir. 2019). “A colorable First Amendment claim is irreparable injury 22 sufficient to merit the grant of relief.” Am. Bev. Ass’n, 916 F.3d at 758 (quoting Doe v. Harris, 23 772 F.3d 563, 583 (9th Cir. 2014)).

24 Section 594.39 was signed into operative law on October 8, 2021. Complaint ¶ 43.
25 Gupta, and other would-be speakers have already suffered constitutional harm. Enforcement 26 of the statute should be enjoined as soon as possible to prevent further irreparable harm.

1 III. The balance of equities and public interest support granting preliminary relief.

2 The remaining two factors to be considered—the public interest and whether other 3 interested persons would be benefited or harmed by an injunction—also weigh in favor of 4 granting relief. Because the statute deters not only Gupta’s speech, but that of all Californians, 5 “the balance of equities and the public interest thus tip sharply in favor of enjoining the [law].”
6 Klein, 584 F.3d at 1208. “This is especially so because the [statute] under scrutiny imposes 7 criminal sanctions for failure to comply.” Doe v. Harris, 772 F.3d 563, 583 (9th Cir. 2014). Thus, 8 “[t]here is a potential for extraordinary harm and a serious chill upon protected speech.” Id.
9 “[I]t is always in the public interest to prevent the violation of a party’s constitutional rights.”
10 Melendres v. Arpaio, 695 F.3d 990, 1002 (9th Cir. 2012) (internal quotations omitted); accord 11 Sammartano v. First Judicial District Court, 303 F.3d 959, 974 (9th Cir. 2002).

12 On the other side of the equation, as described at length above, California enforcement 13 authorities have no shortage of tools to combat legitimately problematic situations of 14 obstructing a vaccination process. If, however, California’s true concern is that anti-vaccination 15 propaganda will successfully persuade people not to get vaccinated, the antidote to that is 16 speech that is true. “The response to the unreasoned is the rational; to the uninformed, the 17 enlightened; to the straight-out lie, the simple truth.” United States v. Alvarez, 567 U.S. 709, 727
18 (2012) (Plurality Op. of Kennedy, J.). That speech can be the government’s own, delivered 19 through, for example, a “public information campaign.” Nat’l Inst. of Family and Life Advocates v.
20 Becerra, 138 S. Ct. 2361, 2376 (2019). But the government may not “co-opt” private parties to 21 act as the mouthpiece of the government’s preferred message. Id. “If there be a time to expose 22 through discussion the falsehood and fallacies, to avert the evil by the processes of education, 23 the remedy to be applied is more speech, not enforced silence.” Whitney v. California, 274 U.S.
24 357, 377 (1927) (Brandeis, J., concurring).

25 26 IV. No injunction bond is necessary here.

27 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65(c) “invest[s] the district court with the discretion as 28 to the amount of security required, if any.” Barabona-Gomez v. Reno, 167 F.3d 1228, 1237 (9th

1 Cir. 1999). “The district court may dispense with the filing of a bond when it concludes there
2 is no realistic likelihood of harm to the defendant from enjoining his or her conduct.” Jorgensen 3 v. Cassidy, 320 F.3d 906, 919 (9th Cir. 2003). Because this is a public-interest case seeking 4 declaratory and injunctive relief and there is no risk of monetary loss to the Defendant from 5 the injunction, the Court should dispense with the bond here. See 11A Charles Alan Wright, et 6 al., FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 2954 (3d ed. 2020) (collecting cases); U.S. WeChat
7 Users All. v. Trump, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 197776, 2020 WL 6271054 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 23, 2020)
8 (declining to impose a bond for injunction in a non-profit’s First Amendment challenge). In 9 fact, the Assembly Appropriations Committee determined that SB 742 would cost the state 10 perhaps $150,000 annually to enforce. Complaint ¶ 36.

11 12 CONCLUSION

13 For these reasons, the Court should grant Gupta’s motion for preliminary injunction.
